GENERAL NEWS.

FROM NEW YORK.

INDIANS STARVING.

Fears of an Outbreak.

NEW YORK, March 31.

The War Department is reported to have been advised that the 7000 Indians around Fort Sill are starving, and as there is no food to spare from the military supplies there, it is feared they will rise against the authorities, especially as they are encouraged by the Northern Sioux so to do. There are only 500 soldiers in Fort Sill. Efforts are making by Secretary Chandler to avert any trouble, but there is much apprehension upon the subject at the War Department.

Senator Allison, chairman of the Indian committee, thinks that it is not likely that the Indian affairs will be transferred to the War Department by this Congress.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The Silver Resumption Bill.

WASHINGTON, March 31.

The vote on the silver resumption bill in the House today was very much mixed respecting party lines, and hard and soft money. There is a general expectation that the Senate will strike out the Reagan amendment, to which many of whom voted for the bill object so decidedly that they would not have assented to the passage of the bill had they not believed the amendment would be killed in the Senate. A considerable number of hard money men, among them Messrs. Pierce, Crapo and Seelye, consider the bill as amended worse than nothing at all, and therefore voted against it.

The Impeachment Managers.

The Democratic caucus tonight nominated as impeachment managers Messrs. Knot, Lord, McMahon, Lynde, Jenks, Hoar and Wheeler—five Democrats and two Republicans.

Attorney-General Pierrepont's Order to District-Attorneys.

Mr. Lord of New York, from the committee on judiciary, today submitted a long report on the resolution referred to that committee in relation to the letter sent by the Attorney General to the United States attorneys at St. Louis, Chicago and Milwaukee. The committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:—

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the long-established rule relating to the testimony of accomplices in criminal actions is necessary to prevent combinations or criminal purposes, and greatly aids in the disclosure of conspiracies to commit crimes and that the letters of the Attorney-General to the district-attorneys of the United States residing in St. Louis, Chicago and Milwaukee dated the 26th day of January, A. D., 1876, stating the determination of the Attorney-General that no person confessing himself guilty should escape punishment, is in contravention of such rule, and that the Attorney-General should immediately revoke the instructions, covered and implied, by the announcement of such determination.

Important Private Bills Passed.

The private calendar bills passed by the House today include two of special interest to New England,—the bill to pay the First National Bank of St. Albans $28,030 for United States 7.30s captured in the famous raid of October 19, 1861, and the bill to provide for compensation to the owners of certain lands, formerly in Maine, ceded to Great Britain by the treaty of July, 1842. By this treaty, a new boundary between Maine and New Brunswick was adopted to meet political and commercial exigencies, and the title to an amount of land between the head of St. Croix River and the St. John, equal to 10,000 acres, was divided from the American proprietors and vested in British subjects. The bill passed today authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to compensate the proprietors so divested for value of the land at the time of its appropriation, at an average rate of not more than three dollars an acre, and also for all timber cut from the land by British subjects during the suspension of jurisdiction by the respective governments preceding the treaty. Thirty five thousand dollars is appropriated to enable the Secretary to carry the bill into effect.

PROVIDENCE.

Fearful Boiler Explosion.—Two Men Killed.—$20,000 Damage Done to Property.

PROVIDENCE, March 31.

This morning at twenty minutes before seven o'clock, as the engine of the Fletcher mill on Back street was starting four of the sixteen boilers exploded, utterly wrecking the two story brick boiler house, but damaging the main mill very little. Thomas Fay, blacksmith, and Bartholomew Coffin, a helper, who were in the boiler room, were killed. The engineer was blown out, but not seriously hurt.

Charles W. Field, who was passing along the street, was caught under the falling roof and severely but probably not fatally injured. Several other persons received slight injuries. The cause of the explosion is not known, but will be inquired into by the coroner's jury. The boilers were twelve years old, and were said to be in good condition, and had plenty of water just before the catastrophe. The loss of the Fletcher Manufacturing Company is estimated at $20,000.

WORCESTER'S CALAMITY.

The Total Loss Half a Million Dollars.

WORCESTER, Mass., March 31.

The loss by the flood is estimated at $500,000. The highways are now being repaired and bridges rebuilt. At a meeting of the water committee of the city council tonight it was decided to engage seven of the most expert engineers in the country to examine the cause of the break. The water pipes torn up are being relaid and another stream has been taken to furnish water to the city. Work will be continued night and day until a supply is secured.

Fatal Locomotive Explosion in Pennsylvania.

HARRISBURG, PA., Mar. 31.

This morning an engine on the Tyrone and Clearfield railroad exploded her boiler near Sand Ridge. Three men, named Miller, Campbell and Shannon, were killed and another named Harvey Waters, was so badly injured that he cannot recover.

THE FLOOD AT CONCORD, MASS.

The Damage Greater than At First Reported.

BOSTON, March 31.

The damage by the late freshet at Concord, Mass., is considerably greater on Assabet river than first reports indicated. The principal scene of destruction is at Damon & Smith's factory at West Yale. Woodsheds and small buildings on the line were swept away, and dwelling houses undermined and swept off their foundations. Three houses were destroyed. The loss here must be about $5000. Further up stream, near the powder mills in Acton, a stone culvert bridge was washed off, rendering the road impassable, and above this was a still heavier wash across the road, which will require one thousand loads of gravel to repair. Below the village a great portion of the road is still under water.

HIS MAKE-UP WAS TOO GOOD.—A good story is told in Figaro apropos of the recent first production of Dumas's "L'Etranger." M. Febvre, who played the part of Clarkson, the American, is noted for his extraordinary zeal for the minutiæ. He wore in the play the chin-beard without moustache, which is customary with Americans, but unheard-of among Europeans, and Figaro declares that it looked so true to life that one might believe that Febvre had cut it from the chin of a veritable Philadelphian! Every article and detail of his make-up, from the boots on his feet to the buttons on his shirt, was faithful to the life. So careful was Febvre in the matter that he spent eight days in the places most frequented by Americans, searching for the type of Clarkson. At last he saw a Bostonian of marked and singular aspect, and immediately exclaimed, "Voila Clarkson!" Taking out his crayon, he made a sketch of the American on the spot, took a memorandum of the material of his clothes, and had a precisely similar suit made by an American tailor. When he appeared upon the stage he was the exact reproduction of the American. Many Americans were present at the customary semi-public final rehearsal of the piece. Next day Dumas's valet brought him the card of a stranger, who was waiting to see him. The stranger was admitted, and Dumas gave a cry of astonishment. The man who confronted him was the exact portrait of Clarkson, the American so well represented by Febvre. Dumas, as soon as he could recover from his surprise, demanded the object of the visit. "Sir," said the stranger, "I know that authors and romancers often change the names of their characters in response to the demands of people who bear the same names. I have come to beg you to cause M. Febvre to change his make-up; he has taken, as you see, my face without my authorization." Dumas could not acquiesce with his demand, but, by pleading eloquently, he finally persuaded his visitor to sacrifice his own physiognomy. And when the American went out among his countrymen and countrywomen, the colony exclaimed, as if in chorus, "How Mr. B.——has changed; he has cut off his beard!"

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

FRIDAY, March 31.

SENATE.

Mr. Cook, of Burrillville, called from the judiciary committee the report of the commissioners to inspect mill dams. The report was read and the accompanying bill, entitled, "an act relative to the inspection of mill dams," was read, ordered printed, and recommitted to the committee on the judiciary. The act provides for the appointment by the governor of a commission, to make a general inspection of the dams within the state twice in every year (in early Spring and Fall) so as to keep fully informed as to the condition of any particular structure; they shall inspect and approve the plans of all new dams erected in the state before such dams shall be built. Upon receipt of any information from any responsible person, to the effect that any dam, bulk-head, or anything connected therewith, or its surroundings are insecure, said commissioners shall visit forthwith such structure, and suggest and recommend to the owner or person maintaining such structure, such alterations or improvements as they may deem necessary to thoroughly protect the public against disaster, and the commissioners shall also have power in extreme cases to control the height of water in such pond or reservoir, so far as possible, until cause for alarm is removed.

The act defining property exempt from taxation (from the house with amendments) was taken up, and after some discussion was referred to the committee on the judiciary, to give the Rhode Island Society for the Encouragement of Domestic Industry an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Verry, from the committee on finance, reported favorably house amendment to senate resolution, making an appropriation for the state prison commissioners, (fixing the sum at $10,000 instead of $100,000) recommending concurrence with the house.

After some discussion the house amendment was adopted, and the resolution as amended was passed in concurrence, and communicated to the house under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. Powel, of Newport, offered a resolution of adjournment, from today until Tuesday, April 11, stating that next week will be as a week of confusion and excitement, and the members will not be in a good state of mind to transact the important business that remains to be done.

Various amendments were offered, and the resolution was finally amended to read: "Adjourn to Monday, April 10th, at 11 A. M.," and as so amended, passed by a vote of 18 yeas to 8 nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Arnold, Chase, Cook, Esbree, Irons, Joh Kenyon, A. B. Lewis, John T. Lewis, Luther, Paine, Powel, Remington, Richardson, Seagrave, Sisson, Turner, Verry—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Carr, Farnum, Hoxsie, A. W. Kenyon, Lyman, Metcalf, Slocum—8.

A message was received from the house, announcing an amendment to the resolution of adjournment, fixing the day at Tuesday, April 11. Concurred in.

The bill in amendment of the militia law was further debated, and sections 2, 4 and 14 of the third section, providing that the commanding officer of each brigade shall order out his command by battalions and companies, between the fifteenth days of May and of June, and that the commanding officer of each company shall order out his command for drill or target practice on some day between the fifteenth of June and the first of September, and that all rolls, returns and general and special orders shall be transmitted through the proper officers were passed.

Sections 4 and 13 of the fourth section, providing for the preparation of rolls within ten days after hearings, and for printing, by the adjutant general were passed.

Sections 2, 3, 10, 11 and 13 of the fifth section, providing for the pay of officers of the house at $3 per day, that payments be made on or before the last day in January, and that expenses for salaries, transportation, &c., shall be made on proper requisition, were passed. Section 5 and 7, providing for the pay of musicians and armorers, were postponed. The bill was then made a special order for Tuesday, April 11.

HOUSE.

Mr. Farnsworth, of Pawtucket, called up the act in addition to chapter 59 of the general statutes, "of laying out and making highways and driftways," being the act known as the "betterment act."

Mr. Sheffield, of Newport, moved the act be passed, and presented a resolution passed by the city council of the city of Newport, asking for the passage of the act.

The act was taken up by sections, and several verbal amendments made.

Mr. Dixon, of Westerly, objected to the passage of the bill, saying it was unjust to force this act upon towns that did not want it, and he thought it better be either indefinitely postponed, or postponed until the next May session, in order to give the towns who did not wish it, an opportunity to protest against it, and made the latter motion.

Messrs. Van Slyck, of Providence, and Sheffield, of Newport, spoke in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. Dixon withdrew his motion to postpone to the May session, and moved that the bill be laid upon the table for the present, to allow the representatives from the country towns to look into the matter.

Mr. Farnsworth offered an additional section providing that the voters of any town qualified to vote upon any proposition to impose a tax or for the expenditure of money in such town, may at its annual Town meeting, direct the Town Council to proceed in laying out streets and highways as heretofore in said town, under the general statutes instead of this act.

The bill was then laid upon the table, in accordance with the motion of Mr. Dixon.

THE REVIVALISTS AND MODERN SKEPTICISM.

[From the New York Times.]

An English traveler, who is a fair representative of one side of modern "culture," has recently published an account of a journey through the Holy Land in company with Mr. Buckle. The chief occupation of this gentleman amid these scenes so sacred to a large part of mankind was to convince Mr. Buckle that even his shreds of religious faith were mere figments; that the belief in immortality was a delusion, and the idea of a God a relic of ancient superstition. Mr. Buckle, it will be remembered, suffered great exhaustion under this process and his long journey, was left by his companion in a feeble condition in Damascus, and owing to what the writer calls the "irony of fate," but which plain people will call the heartlessness of an atheist, was abandoned to die alone. Mr. Glennie-Stuart, in this volume, (Pilgrim Memories,) goes out of the way to print a note upon the work of the Evangelists now in this city, styling them "adventurers," and asserting that many cases of insanity have been the result of their efforts in Great Britain.

We cannot say precisely what the effect of their labors has been abroad, but it is very evident that here the influence is directly the opposite of that which produces mental disturbance. In fact, in this city, they may be said to have checked insanity, in that they have broken up hot fits of drinking in numbers of persons, and sent them back to their homes reformed men and women, though madness in its worst form, delirium tremens, was threatening them. Nor can the influence of the revivalists here be called exciting or sensational. There has not been the usual manifestation of feeling in these meetings which is common in revivals. No physical excitement has been apparent. The audiences have been singularly calm and still. Great numbers of people have left their old courses of life, and have set before themselves a new ideal; but the change has been quiet and deep, showing itself in more sweet and just lives—not in noise or speech or tears. How a writer, calling himself a philosopher and lover of truth, and boasting himself a gentleman, can stigmatize these men as "adventurers" we cannot understand. An adventurer seeks money or selfish ends, but these preachers can truly say, amid a generation given up to greed, that they have "coveted no man's gold or silver or apparel." In cities crowded with luxurious homes they have had no certain dwelling-place. While others are accumulating property for sickness or old age, they earn no money, and their families depend upon the kindness of strangers. We should not have respected them the less had they received a fair compensation for their useful labors, but, under any circumstances, we submit that they least of all merit the epithet of "adventurers."

According to Mr. Stuart and his school, the thousand year agonies of humanity are the useless sufferings of accidental beings under the iron heel of chance; the hopes of millions of death beds lighting up the "Dark Valley" are like the gleams of Summer lightning on a midnight sky, leaving a deeper darkness; the faith as taught by Revelation is only a mirage; and God himself is but the shadow of a force. But while preaching this comforting gospel, Mr. Stuart feels the necessity of "an ideal out of one's self," of a "principle of love" which shall impel man to the highest unselfish action; and he cannot find words equal to express his admiration of Buddha Gothama, who left a prince's throne to cure the evils of fallen humanity. It is a singular instance of the narrowness of modern "liberalism" that such writers do not see that men like Moody and Sankey are above all preaching an "ideal out of one's self," and that they hold forth incessantly the very embodiment of the "principle of love," and that the drift and purpose of all their teachings is for men to come out of themselves, to forget themselves, and be filled with a belief and an ideal which is far beyond and above feeble humanity. If Socrates taught the absolute devotion to truth, they teach it more fully. If Buddha was filled with compassion for suffering humanity, they present One who has carried the very name of the "Man of Sorrows." If Confucius inculcated the principles of humanity, they preach Him who has embodied human brotherhood. Why cannot the skeptical school analyze modern Christianity as well as ancient Buddhism? Surely the one is as worthy of study and fair treatment as the other.

Had Mr. Moody been an ancient Egyptian priest, seeking to make men better, and devoting his life to preaching the doctrine of love and the belief in Osiris, the works of modern skeptics would have rung with his praise. But being only a Christian, and an American, and spending his days and nights in teaching men truth and love and brotherhood and justice, and, above all, presenting the life which embodies these, and calling men out of themselves to the ideal and transplanted. The florists furnish it when desired in abundance and generally at a reasonable price. There is also a variety of double petunias which are very large and

In calling attention to these flowers we write not for florists, or amateurs who give much time to these matters, but for those who love flowers and are so situated as not to be able to devote much attention to their cultivation. To farmers' wives and daughters we say, try any or all the above, sow them in beds of considerable size each sort by itself, and you will have no occasion to be ashamed of your flower garden. Don't put a plant here and there, but mass them and you will see that these old sorts are more beautiful than most of the new kinds, with their Latin names that you cannot remember, even if you should try.

A word as to seeds. There are poor seeds and good seeds always in the market. We have for years, sent our orders direct to James Vick, of Rochester, who forwards them by mail, post paid, and at his own risk, to any address. He is thoroughly reliable every way. His seeds are also on sale in Newport, at Alderson's, but any one who is so situated as not to be able to obtain them at home need have no hesitation in writing as above. If you choose send first for a catalogue. There are other reliable seed growers, but our experience with Vick has been so satisfactory that we have not tried them.

THE FLOWER GARDEN.

(From the Newport Journal.)

In these days there are few families that do not give some attention to the cultivation of flowers. There is scarcely one that has not room on the farm or in the garden to sow a few seeds and whose occupation will not afford opportunities to attend to their culture. Neither are there many who do not find substantial pleasure, and derive genuine happiness from this work. It is true we sometimes meet with failures, but not often, if we are willing to exercise patience and care, without which success is impossible in any department of life. Many failures result from attempts to raise new varieties of which little is known, and in the treatment of which mistakes are almost sure to result. Our advice to those who are not skilled in these matters is to keep to the old and well tried sorts, or at best try the new ones sparingly. One of the best plants of this character which may be grown in almost endless variety is the Aster. For a few years this has been partially pushed out of sight as a kind of plebeian plant. But it will be hard to show a better flower for general cultivation. It may be had in great variety of form, color or size and is suited to all tastes. Asters may be raised, not more than eight or ten inches in height, and when planted in beds about eight inches apart, will cover the ground and well repay their culture. Or if it is preferred plants may be had from two to three feet tall which make an Autumn show not surpassed by any of the new and fancy kinds. These every large ones will need support in exposed positions which is easily afforded by staking. Asters need not be planted very early. They are essentially a Fall flower and will do better not to be forced.

Another hardy, popular, and old fashioned annual is the candytuft. This has been cultivated hundreds of years, will grow anywhere in good soil, and by sowing seed at different times may afford a constant succession of flowers. There are several varieties, the two differing most widely of which are shown in the following cut.

The pansy is also worthy of more general cultivation. This is one of those companionable flowers that every body loves. The seed should be sown early, or else in a cool place in July for Autumn blooming. The flowers are never large in warm weather.

The plant should have a rapid growth and then it will throw our flowers in bunches as represented in the engraving.

Another well known plant that is raised with little difficulty is the petunia. This plant was discovered in South America about fifty years ago and its appearance in Europe attracted great attention among the florists of the old world. It was then a simple white flower. Seven years later a purple one was discovered in Brazil, and now it is found in almost every color, and also highly variegated. The petunia makes a showy bed in the distance. It can be raised from seed sown in the open ground, or started in boxes as a house plant

PATENT

SPECTACLES.

The advantages of the Parabola Glasses over the old form of Spectacles, are a greater density of material, perfect surfaces, and Parabolic form. These qualities, united, form the most perfect adjustment. In the perfect transmission of light, joined to their peculiar form the wearer of the Parabola Spectacles is enabled to prosecute the most trying labors of the eye without those distressing results which follow the use of all other glasses. A peculiar and important feature in these Spectacles is witnessed in cases where young persons have been obliged to resort to the use of glasses, from some physical debility having affected temporarily their vision. In such cases the eye soon regains its healthy powers, and the glasses can be laid aside without having had the least tendency to affect the eyes so as to demand their continuous use.

(From Dr. George McClellan, Philadelphia.)

I have recommended the "Parabola Spectacles" to several of my patients, and have received from most of them warm encomiums upon the article. They assert that these glasses do not fatigue the eyes by long use, as is said to be the case with the double convex Spectacles, while the command of the eyes over the object of vision is much greater. This corresponds with the opinion any oculist would form from his knowledge of the principles upon which those glasses are adjusted—so as to converge the rays coming from different quarters to the same focal distance. The eyes can be trained to a considerable extent, therefore, under these glasses, without involving the necessity of moving the head.

Tingley Automatic Heat Governor.

Price Reduced Until the First of July Next.

Price attached to furnace $30. Better pay for a Governor that will surely prevent the escape of poisonous gases from your furnace, than save your money, and breathe a tainted atmosphere, suffer from the inconvenience of coal dust, unevenly heated rooms, and danger from fire. SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1876.

THE DAY.

Five Democrats and two Republicans will act as impeachment managers in the approaching Belknap trial.

The bill for the taxation of church property was defeated in the Massachusetts house yesterday by a vote of 116 to 64.

It is reported that seven thousand Indians in the vicinity of Fort Sill are in a starving condition, and fears of a rising against the authorities are entertained.

The London Times hopes that the ministry may be yet better advised than to persist in recommending to the queen the assumption of the title of empress of India.

The damage by the break in the Worcester reservoir will not amount to much more than half a million dollars. Many of the sufferers announce their attention of bringing suits against the city for damages.

In the United States Senate yesterday the Mississippi election resolution was further discussed, and the amendment of Mr. Christiancy adopted. The bill to issue silver in place of fractional currency was passed by the House of Representatives. A bill to define the tax on malt and fermented liquors was also passed.

There are two reports from the Mississippi Republican convention. One is that fourteen of the sixteen delegates to Cincinnati are openly for Morton. The other is that a majority of the delegates are for Bristow or Blaine, Morton having a minority. If Morton can't even carry Mississippi his political career is an immense failure.

By the explosion of three boilers in the Fletcher Manufacturing Company's establishment at Providence, yesterday, two men were instantly killed and several others injured, besides damaging property to the extent of $20,000. Three men were also killed by the explosion of a locomotive boiler on the Clearfield (Pa.) Railroad yesterday morning.

The Chicago Tribune wants Gen. Sherman to go back to Washington because "He has the courage to defy the follies and extravagances of fashion, and to live strictly within his income, and would have a very material influence in changing the present false condition of social life at the capital." But the general says it cost him about $3000 a year more than his salary to live in Washington.

A man named Bell, during the war a federal scout and as such favorably known to Gen. Grant and others, astonished Clymer's committee yesterday by his testimony. He said that the President wished him appointed a secret agent of the Attorney-General to find out whether Babcock was really guilty, or whether the case against him was made up to injure the President. Pierrepont wouldn't appoint him because "a high Treasury official" would object. Chandler then gave him a commission. Levi P. Luckey told him to do whatever Bradley, a brother-in-law of Boss Shepherd, told him to do. Bradley told him to get the evidence against Babcock from Dyer and destroy it. Bell wouldn't do this, but stole some of the papers, showed them to Babcock and returned them. Bell says he worked at this case till satisfied of Babcock's guilt, and then "threw up the sponge," and that it was on account of his [Bell's] belief in Babcock's guilt that the President discharged Babcock from his secretaryship. He says he told Chandler that he was going to New York for Babcock and asked if he should give particulars, and Chandler said "No." Three days after Bell published in the New York Herald a cypher used between him and Luckey, which he published after he concluded Babcock was guilty, Chandler dismissed him. Chandler, Babcock, Bradley and Luckey declare Bell to be an egregious liar, but it is reported that Gen. Henderson of St. Louis says he can substantiate Bell's story.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

"La Source d'Eau Vive" is the title of a new French evangelical monthly paper which is designed for those interested in mission work among our French-American population.

The committee of missionaries engaged the translation of the Scriptures into Japanese have already published Luke's Gospel. "Romans" will soon go to press, and "Hebrews" is now in the hands of the committee.

The American chapel in Paris has been more prosperous than ever this year, and reports an accession of forty members and an income of 23,500 francs, with large congregations and encouraging schools, classes and mission work.

The large number of persons in America who have taken an interest in the school established at Rome by the lamented Mrs. Gould, and conducted by her with great wisdom as well as devotion, will be glad to learn that it is not to be abandoned, and the little waifs cast out into the darkness from which they were rescued, but is to be placed under the charge of the Waldensians. It will be carried on in its old quarters and be called, in memory of its beloved foundress, who sacrificed her life to it, the Gould Memorial school. The Gould committee take charge of the home and its industrial element. As Mrs. Gould was an American, her life and labors have attracted much interest here as well as abroad.

The new Baptist publication house in Philadelphia cost $275,000 for ground and building. One family virtually gave $165,000, or nearly two thirds of this amount—William Bucknell and the family of his first wife, who was a Crozier.

The Rev. C. L. Eastman, a member of the New England conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, and a superintendent of the city mission and church extension work, has been elected pastor by the Boston Port society over which Father Taylor for so many years presided.

The Rev. Thomas Simons, a Burmah missionary, died at Prome, Feb. 19. He was born in Wales, July 15, 1801, studied at Newton Theological Institution, was ordained in Georgia, 1831, and sailed from Boston on June 29, 1832. He had very few seniors in in the missionary field and he was the oldest missionary in Burmah. He has labored at Akyab, Maulmain and Prome.

The German parliament is not moved by our American idea of the liberty of the pulpit in its recent legislation upon political preaching. The text of the recent act is thus translated: "Imprisonment for two years may be applied to the minister of religion who, in the exercise of his function, introduces any writings which treat of state affairs in a way which might trouble the government."

The Rev. Dr. Dodge, in a recent Baptist centennial sermon, made the remarkable statement that while the Baptists had contributed only one ninth of the money given by American Christians for foreign missons, and sent only one tenth of the missionaries, they had more than one half of the communicants and churches in foreign lands. In the first twenty years only 500 converts were made; in the last twenty years 61,000.

The Westfield, Mass., Methodists have completed their fine new church building, and will soon dedicate it free of debt. It is one of the most commodious and imposing church structures in western Massachusetts. It is Gothic in style, of brick, 141 by 84 feet, trimmed with Longmeadow and Ohio stone, with two spires, 206 and 95 feet high, and cost, with the organ and furnishing, $80,000. The audience room will seat 1,400 people and the vestry 700.

The First Baptist church of Detroit publishes a small monthly paper, containing all news of interest to the church. A feature of the paper is the publication monthly of the names of all members. The plan is a good one, and we presume the members all feel themselves under obligations to live better lives than they would, if they could keep the fact of their membership a secret. Think of the names of all church members in New England being made public every month! There would be some consternation, we suspect, among the silver slippered Christians.

A very significant as well as interesting celebration was the recent centennial of Methodism in North Carolina. Its introduction there, feeble at first, gradually became a religious power, not merely in the Old North state, but throughout the whole South, until now it is probably the dominant religious influence south of the old line. Methodism there has seemed to be inspired with the zeal, energy and force that distinguished its illustrious founder, John Wesley, and what that was may be inferred from the following remarks by one of the centennial orators: "His labors were simply stupendous. His writings would fill a library; his travels averaged annually 4500 miles down to his seventieth year; and at this rate he equalled the circuit of the globe in every six years; preaching, at that, two, three and four times daily. He delivered in his work 42,000 sermons, being an average of fifteen per week. He attracted the largest audiences of modern times, sometimes numbering over 30,000 people. 'His genius for government,' says Macaulay, 'was not inferior to that of Richelieu.'" This has been one of the best illustrations that history affords of the force of example.

THE COST OF LIVING.

Some weeks ago we published a carefully prepared statement of the condition of trade and of the labor market in this city. Today we present a supplementary statement of the cost of living, as compared with the prices ruling three years ago. The facts have been carefully collected, and an endeavor has been made to present them with entire accuracy. The conclusions drawn from them may be depended on as being as nearly correct as the complex nature of the subject will permit. It is obviously not an easy thing to correctly estimate the average reduction in the cost of living for a whole city. To do this requires for a basis of calculation a complete exhibit of the comparative cost of all the articles comprised under the three principal heads of food, clothing, and shelter, and when the reduction in the cost of these has been averaged, the average portion which each of the three items takes from an income must be estimated, and a balance struck, after allowing for contingencies, for the whole. This method has been followed in the preparation of the article to which we refer; and it is the only one by which even approximate accuracy can be reached.

Remembering how heavy has been the reduction in the wages of most classes of artisans and laborers, averaging for all about twenty to twenty five per cent., it will be seen that the cost of living is far from keeping pace with the reduced capacity for earning. The average reduction of price in the various articles of food which find their way to the tables of the working man has been about five per cent. and as the estimate for the cost of food is about half the total expenditure of the head of the family, it follows that the saving on this item is two and a half per cent. In clothing, speaking again for the working classes, the reduction has been about fifteen per cent. both for men and women; but there has been only a slight decline in the prices for the better kinds of clothing, and still less in those of the fashionable and highest priced varieties. The cost of clothing for the family of the working man is supposed to be from one fifth to one fourth of his expenditures, which would make the saving about three per cent. on the year. The third item—shelter—includes the house and its furnishings. The reduction in the cost of both may be estimated at between ten and twelve per cent., equal to three per cent. saving on the average annual cost. The sum of these reductions approximates eight and a half per cent., as compared with the cost of the same things three years ago. If this estimate be correct, it will be seen that the working classes of this city must feel the pressure of hard times with some severity, and it is a gratifying fact that under these circumstances there has been so little demand made by them during this Winter on the charity of the community.

The last report of the banking superintendent showed how heavily the hard times had pressed upon the poorer classes of depositors in the savings banks. The total deposits in these showed a large increase over the previous year, but this was owing to the larger amounts put into the banks by comparatively well-to-do people, whose faith in other securities had been shaken. The withdrawals were very heavy among the poorer classes, and the savings of previous prosperous years were required to meet the deficiencies of the present. It is well that the practice of providing something for a rainy day prevailed to the extent it evidently has; for without this, and the providentially mild Winter, there would have been an amount of distress in New York such as has been rarely witnessed. As it is, we have had no public soup kitchens to establish; and though the various charitable societies have given out freely, we have seen little evidence that the demands upon them have been much heavier than is usual in any Winter, or when there has been no cry of hard times.—[New York Times.

LOCAL AFFAIRS.

—The Aquidneck House opens the second week in April.

—Howard Stockton, one of the Summer residents, is in town.

—There was no New York mail this morning by way of Wickford.

—The annual meeting of the Association for the Aged will be held next Thursday afternoon.

—Officer Steal has rearrested the Mason boy who was in the station house a few days ago for assaulting the son of Peter Lee.

—G. B. Reynolds has decided not to be a candidate for councilman another year. Samuel Smith of the firm of Smith & Butler is talked of as his successor.

—Mr. Pray has completed his new building on Spring street and has opened his store with a well selected stock of jewelry, watches and clocks.

—The small schooner Julia, which has been laid up at Commercial wharf for some time, was taken to Cottrell's marine railway this morning where she will be repaired.

—Prof. Russell has decided not to accept the proposition extended him by the Newport band to become their leader. His band at Fitchburg, Mass., were unwilling to release him.

—The schooner Katy J. Hoyt arrived here yesterday from Weehawken with a cargo of coal for Brown & Howard. During the squall of Thursday afternoon off Beaver Tail her new main sail was blown away.

—On the 5th inst., the Tallapoosa is expected at the station to take one hundred boxes of torpedoes and other articles made on the island to Philadelphia for the centennial exhibition.

—A. O. Titus, J. D. Richardson, Russell Manchester and William A. Stedman have made arrangements to connect their houses in the vicinity of Broadway with their places of business, by telegraph wires.

—James B. Brayton's friends announce that he will be a candidate for city marshal, thus there will be four candidates, namely; G. A. Simmons, the present incumbent, Harwood E. Read, Thomas S. Tilley and James B. Brayton.

—Officer Steel arrested Thomas Farrell yesterday afternoon for assault and battery on Albert Wilcox. When found he was intoxicated and he made matters lively when he was locked up in the station house. It was found necessary to chain him in the cell.

—Last evening as a carriage with a pair of horses, owned and driven by Mr. Webb, was passing along Thames street, the forward axle broke letting the carriage down to the ground. The horses were walking at the time and there were no persons inside the carriage.

—John Waters & Co., have made a contract with the committee on city property to build a gravel trap on the South side of Long wharf where the main sewers terminate. They will drive planks and make it tight. The gravel will be used to fill up the new city wharf.

—William J. Swinburne is building a coal shed on his wharf at the foot of Mary street. It is on the south side of the mill and is 120 x35 feet. An addition of 75 feet is also being built to the old bin altogether increasing the storing capacity of the yard from 2000 to 2500 tons. The head of the south wharf will be enlarged so as to allow room on the front of the new shed.

—This noon Thomas Burlingham sold at auction a quantity of bank stock as follows: Seven shares of the capital stock of the Aquidneck National Bank to Frederick Tompkins at $72.50 per share, and seven more to same person at $72.75; eight shares of the Merchants Bank to Samuel Carr at $97.50; five shares of the Rhode Island Union Bank to Oliver Read at $103.50 and six shares of the same to George F. Crandall at $110.12½.

—Kallock & Manuel, a new firm, have opened a meat market at 72 Broadway. Mr. Kallock has formerly been in the employ of C. F. Bates, at Coddington point, and Mr. Manuel has acquired practical experience in the business during the six years he has been with Charles Spooner, a few doors below on the same street. The new firm will doubtless have a fair share of the patronage of the public.

—Yesterday afternoon a large mud scow belonging to the contractors who are engaged in dredging the harbor sunk outside. She was loaded with mud. It is presumed that some rock dug up by the dipper was dropped with such force into the bottom of the scow that when the traps were opened the rock was washed out and the water rushed into the hole. The scow was valued at $1500 and the dipper at $300 more. It is the same scow that sunk last Spring near Commercial wharf.

—The chorus have their rehearsal on Monday evening next. The most of the time at the last meeting was spent upon Haydn's grand chorus—"The Heavens are Telling," from the "Creation." Although somewhat trying for tenor voices, and formidable in the bass, by reason of rapid successions of modulation, the rehearsal was a success. The number present, forty, was slightly reduced from the previous number, by sickness, and the attractions of the "tea party." This however, will be only temporary. The singers were highly pleased and very enthusiastic.

Albert H. Essex has sold about 8000 feet of land, with buildings, on the corner of Broadway and Oak street to Edwin G. Spooner for $8000

THE CENTENNIAL TEA PARTY.

The Centennial tea party given in Touro chapel by the ladies of the Unitarian church was repeated last evening with no particular change of programme. The music was furnished by the Newport orchestra, the music the first night, having been given by the orchestra from the fort. The attendance was very good and the receipts for both evenings amounted to about $551.

The following poem by the Rev. Mr. Brooks, handsomely printed in colors, was extensively sold. Some copies remain and and may be obtained at the book store of Charles E. Hammett, Jr.

THE OLD THIRTEEN.

The curtain rises on a hundred years—
A pageant of the olden time appears.
Let the historic muse her aid supply,
To note and name each form that passes by.
Here come the old original thirteen!—
Sir Walter ushers in the Virgin Queen;
Catholic Mary follows her, whose land
Smiles on soft Chesapeake from either strand;
Then Georgia, with the sisters Caroline,—
One the palmetto wears, and one the pine;
Next, she who ascertained the rights of men
Not by the sword but by the word of Penn;
The friendly language hers, of "thee" and "thou;"
Then, she whose mother was a thrifty vrouw,—
Mother, herself, of princely children now;
And sitting at her feet, the sisters twain,—
Two smaller links in the Atlantic chain,—
They, through those long, dark Winters, drear and dire,
Watched with our Fabius round the bivouac-fire!
Comes the free mountain-maid, in white and green;
One guards the Charter-oak with lofty mien;
And lo! in the plain beauty once she wore,
The pilgrim mother from the Bay state shore;
And last, not least, is Little Rhody seen,
With face turned heavenward, steadfast and serene,—
She on her anchor, Hope, leans, and will ever lean.

NEWPORT, R. I., March 30, 1876.

New Jersey is sometimes derisively spoken of as a foreign country, but it was for no such reason, nor indeed for any reason, that the booth having its name and presided over by Miss Carrie Taylor in a Scandinavian costume out of compliment to the founders of "New Sweden," was omitted from yesterday's report. It was simply an oversight in transcribing from the reporter's minutes.

The centennial tea party afforded enjoyment to all who visited it, and every one will be pleased that it has yielded profit to the society.

PERSONALS.

......George William Curtis says, "Fine professors of reform with candidates who are themselves constituent parts of the thing to be reformed will not carry the country."

......The cause of Republicanism, involving all that is dear in citizenship, has never had a more faithful advocate and defender than Conkling has proved himself to be, under all circumstances and contingencies, since he entered public life.—[Washington National Republican, Adm.

......Nobody believes for a moment that this is the voice of the masses of New York Republicanism. Nobody fears that the people are so imbecile or reckless as to take up with a pillar of Grantism, after their fresh experience.—[Boston Herald, Ind. Dem.

......There is one circumstance alone which should prevent Mr. Conkling's nomination for President, and that is the hard feeling in New York between Mr. Conkling's friends and opponents, creating a divison in the party of that state, so far as he is concerned, which would probably lose New York to the Republicans if he were nominated.—[Chicago Tribune, Rep.

......No man can remember when, in the administration of Grant, Conkling's voice was raised against any official abuse. All can remember how like a cur he has barked at Republicans who have done this. No one thinks his election possible if he were nominated. No one thinks his nomination probable. All suppose that his game is to to wield the New York delegation in a solid body for his own stratagem.—[Cincinnati Gazette, Rep.

......It does not appear probable that Mr. Conkling's name will be strenuously insisted upon at Cincinnati. There was too much opposition to him to make this possible. But it must be remembered that if opposition to Conkling means Blaine's strength, so does the support of Conkling show the opposition [to Blaine. If either of these two men are nominated at Cincinnati, the loss of New York is more than possible.—[Cincinnati Times, Rep.

......With the exception of the irresponsible delegates from the Democratic states, who may be ready for a trade it is hard to imagine Mr. Conkling securing the vote of a single delegation outside of New York, and this weakness in the convention is merely the reflex of his intrinsic weakness before the people.—[St. Louis Globe, Rep.

......The Louisville Courier-Journal gives Democratic reasons against Mr. Bristow's becoming President of the United States. It says that "while his elevation might reduce and subject the thieves, it would continue the baleful party spirit and arrogant partisan domination under which the public service has suffered so long. Mr. Bristow is not only a Republican, but a Republican on principle, and an extreme Republican."

......Ik Marvel's letter, declining the offer of the nomination of Governor by the soft money party in Connecticut, is probably the most picturesque political document on record. "I would rather be farmer than governor," he says. "I would rather sit in my library of an afternoon and watch the growing corn undulating in the western wind than sit in the chair of state signing bills for public acts, and the bright flag floating above the capitol would not be so pleasing in my eyes as the smoky banner of the far off steamer seen athwart the dancing waters silvered in the June sunshine."

......The only chance we see now for the Republican party to elect the next President hangs upon the nomination of Bristow. He is known as a reformer, as well as a true Republican. His name would be a sufficient platform. Blaine is not a reformer—he has not a bit of the reformer in his composition. Conkling is not a reformer—he has always been one of the most servile of the administration Senators. Morton is not a reformer—he is an avowed opponent of civil service reform. It is unnecessary to go any further. Bristow is the only prominent Republican who is also known to be a reformer. The honest members of the party should not let the organs cheat them in this matter.—[Boston Herald.

......Probably your readers have already been favored with the news that young Bennett is now arranging another of his lightning train excursions—this time to San Francisco. It is designed to be a special the whole distance, and to be run through as swiftly as the road will admit. The idea is to make the quickest time on record between the Atlantic and Pacific, and to astonish the Californians by showing them what a live New Yorker, and not a Bonanza Prince, either, can do in the way of unnecessary extravagance. The "true inwardness" of this notion is a desire to do something to gratify (strange creature she must be) his lady-love by novel experiences very much in the same way an ordinary mortal would ask his intended to take a buggy ride to Central Park. Ever since young Bennett became spoony on the idol of his present affections, he has sought to distinguish himself by providing her stunning amusements. Riding games (horseback croquet, the boys call it), parlor skating parties, coaching, yachting, theatre parties, Canadian railway picnics, night visits to newspaper offices, and club parties—all these have been tried, and still new conquests in the line of stunning events are sought for. A young lady friend of Mr. Bennett's financee lately asked her what would remain in the way of novelty for a bridal tour after all these ingenious devices to amuse had been exhausted. She answered, "You trust Mr. B. for that."—[N. Y. Correspondent Chicago Tribune.

A DISTINGUISHED FEMALE LOBBYIST.—The St. Louis Republican has some entertaining reminiscences of Mildred Benton, who occasionally is mentioned in Washington correspondence as one of the most successful of the dashing female lobbyists at the national capital. She was a native of Maysville, Kentucky, very pretty, and her maiden name was Mildred White. In 1862 she married Gen. Benton, of the federal army. He died the same year and left a marvellously beautiful and fascinating widow. Mildred Benton went into the war, and came out of it a staunch rebel. She doubtless married a federal general to operate more safely as a spy, but did not have him long. She was watched and caught and put under a lock and key several times during the war, but always came out early and all right. Of course such a woman became a Washington lobbyist, and exerted more influence over the fortunes of the country than the President himself. Such characters always appear to be in the right place at the right time to make notoriety. Mrs. Benton was living in the Grand Central Hotel, New York, when Stokes killed Fisk. Saw the shot fired—picked up the smoking revolver, threw it on a lounge and immediately disappeared. She was wanted as a witness and there was a long search for her. She was finally brought to bay, and produced as a witness at the trial of Stokes, with whom she deeply sympathized. When the old contract for the government patent seal lock had expired she lobbied lavishly for the renewal. She is said to have spent $60,000 to secure the contract, but it was worth $100,000 a year. Her whole life has been a series of splendid victories over men. Mrs. Benton figured largely in the French arms scandal; is said to have manipulated the $20,000 alleged to have been paid to Belknap's wife before her marriage; and is now supposed to be mixed up in some way with other scandals. Altogether Mildred Benton has as many scalps hanging in her belt as any other woman in the United States.

Extra Liability to Malarial Infection

Persons whose blood is thin, digestion weak and liver sluggish, are extra-liable to the attacks of malarial disease. The most trifling exposure may, under such conditions, infect a system which, if healthy, would resist the miasmatic taint. The only way to secure immunity from malaria in localities where it is prevalent, is to tone and regulate the system by improving weakened digestion, enriching the blood, and giving a wholesome impetus to biliary secretion. These results are accomplished by nothing so effectively as Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which long experience has proved to be the most reliable safeguard against fever and ague and kindred disorders, as well as the best remedy for them. The bitters are, moreover, an excellent invigorant of the organs of urination, and an active depurent, eliminating from the blood those acid impurities which originate rheumatic ailments. mar29-1w-n&1

Dr. Schenck's Standard Remedies.

The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are SCHENCK'S PULMONIC SYRUP, SCHENCK'S SEA WEED TONIC, and SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS, and, if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

To these three medicines Dr. J. H. Schenck, of Philadelphia, owes his unrivalled success in the treatment of pulmonary diseases.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs; nature throws it off by an easy expectoration, for when the phlegm or matter is ripe a slight cough will throw it off, the patient has rest and the lungs begin to heal.

To enable the Pulmonic Syrup to do this, Schenck's Mandrake Pills and Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic must be freely used to cleanse the stomach and liver. Schenck's Mandrake Pills act on the liver, removing all obstructions, relax the gall bladder, the bile starts freely, and the liver is soon relieved.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative; the alkali of which it is composed, mixes with the food and prevents souring. It assists the digestion by toning up the stomach to a healthy condition, so that the food and the Pulmonic Syrup will make good blood; then the lungs heal, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent fresh cold.

All who wish to consult Dr. Schenck, either personally or by letter, can do so at his principal office, corner of SIXTH and ARCH STS., Philadelphia, every Monday.

Schenck's medicines are sold by all druggists throughout the country. mar6-2m-bo

LYON'S KATHAIRON prevents the Hair from falling out or turning gray, renews its growth, and gives strength and vigor. It is delightfully perfumed, and makes a splendid dressing. It is the cheapest and most desirable Hair Tonic ever produced. Used by the elite. Price only 50 cents. aug4-1yr.

THOMPSON'S POMADE OPTIME, for dressing the hair.—This fine pomade merits special attention. Purely vegetable, its effect is to soften and refine coarse dry hair, imparting to it gloss and beauty. Unlike many preparations for the hair, it cannot injure, but is highly beneficial, equally so, to the rich golden hued tresses of youth, the darker shades of middle life, or the silver streaked locks of age. 25 and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by druggists.

MR. PLUNKETT.

Mr. Plunkett was a gentleman who knew the ' ... time of day,
If not the interstellar spaces of the milk- ... y way;
But the world had used him roughly ... , and in consequence he took
To overhauling barrels with a r... usty iron hook.

There are many ways of winning wealth, as every patriot knows,
More particularly sudden than the method Plunkett chose;
But (young man regard this maxim!) any line of life on earth
May be dignified by virtue and adorned by honest worth.

And Mr. Plunkett never stole a railroad, I believe;
Nor dealt in crooked whiskey, crooked fortunes to retrieve;
Nor shared a plunderer's profit his own income to enhance;
But I must confess, in passing, that he never had the chance.

But all the same a bit of luck he lately tumbled to:
He was raking in some rubbish on an up-town avenue,
When he came upon a treasure which had been swept down the stair
By a maid whose hair was flustered by a little love affair.

'Twas a single diamond earring, small, but worth a pretty sum;
And he slipped it in his pocket, with intention to be mum;
But a gent who saw the circumstance, in tones with menace fraught,
Desired him to divvy—which was foreign to his thought.

And at once my hero's honesty became conspicuous,
And he delicately hinted that the other was a cuss,
And revealed that his design had been, as no one could gainsay,
To return the little jewel to its owner right away.

Which he rang the bell and did so, not forgetting to recite
A judicious exposition of his impecunious estate;
And he found the grateful owner quite responsive to his need,
And walked off with his dollars, very virtuous indeed.

I pray you not condemn this tale as naught but idle rhymes,
Till you hear my pretty moral, which is suited to the times.
The honesty that pays is very beautiful and chaste,
While a theft (that is discovered) is in wretchedly bad taste.

—[FELIX ARKWRIGHT.

My Choice.

"You went away very abruptly the other day, Mrs. Marbury," said Mrs. Chappell to me, when I called as I was passing about a fortnight afterwards (I had in the meantime been nursing a sick child.)

"Well," I answered, "you were busy, and I had stopped short in my narrative just at that point of my life where fiction ordinarily ends; and such a flood of recollection came over me as I stood leaning against your counter, that I did not feel inclined to disenchant even myself."

"You see, Mrs. Campbell," I went on, "When an elderly woman's memory goes into the dreamland of her courtship and honeymoon she does not like the jolting journey back to common life. So when you left me thinking of Oliver Marbury so he appeared in his short waisted, tight fitting claret colored coat, his white satin stock and waistcoat, pale stone colored trousers, and patent leather boots, and myself in my pretty white satin drawn bonnet and blonde fall, my white book muslin dress and satin sash, my small white Paisley bordered Norwich shawl and sandalled slippers, I was so full of that happy marriage morn in our old church at S——, and the dinner afterwards, when my father astonished Amos and Leah by giving me the thousand pounds, that I did not care to shut out the picture, and took myself off instead."

"Then did your marriage turn out so badly?" questioned Mrs. Chappell, with one eye on the shop door the while.

"Badly! It was an unfortunate day when David Beech allowed himself to be talked over, and let his pet daughter become Mary Marbury. Better, ten thousand times, have remained Mary Beech to the end of my days!

"Yet, as I went with Oliver inside the hired chaise to the new home I had not yet seen, and his arm held me close to him all the way, and he stooped now and then to whisper 'My wife,' and tell me how much he loved me, and how happy we should be, I thought that one word 'wife' comprehended all that was ecstatic and sublime, and the vista of the future held not a cloud.

"Two things struck me about our house (which had been his father's) the unused dusty look of the library, a small room like an offshoot at the back, but crammed with books, and, secondly, the hunting whips, gig whips, spurs, racing calendars framed and glazed, the guns, shot belts and powder flasks, the boxing gloves and foils hung up or littering about the whole house. Then, too, there were cigars and pipes, cards and dice in drawers and boxes; and the first faint, impalpable shadow of doubt crept over me.

"'Oliver will forego these things now that he is married,' said I to myself, 'and I will make that delightful old library quite a snuggery. It is the most cosy room in the house.'

"At first he drove me about here and there, and one or two of his father's very old friends called upon me; but his own acquaintances were mostly men in Newmarket coats like his own, who talked slang, smoked incessantly, stared hard at me, or made freer than I liked, and who walked in and out of the house ordered servants, drank beer and brandy, went and stayed with a freedom very foreign to my notions, and altogether upset my theories of the privacy of domestic life.

"There was one, a Captain Thornton, I especially disliked, and I told Oliver so. 'He will ruin you if you continue to associate with him.' I said.

"Oliver laughed, patted my cheek, and replied knowingly, 'My dear, he might if I were not too deep for him. I mean to make a fortune out of the captain before long.'

"I had heard from my father that Oliver's property was not large, and, little as I knew of such matters, I could tell my £1,000 would not go far to support such a mode of life. But he only laughed when I said captains and country squires were not associates for him. 'Never you mind, Mary, I know what I'm about.' And then he grew angry when I spoke on the subject, so I desisted.

"Frequently he was away for a week or two together, and then the whole tribe went with him—not that at other times we always had the house full; but it was seldom quite empty. We rarely had a quiet evening to ourselves. He was away when my baby was born, and I was partly glad of it, for the house was quiet.

"Oliver had insisted upon a christening feast, and gave his orders as if Potosi had been at his command.

"'Hang the cost! What do I care?' was his reply to my wish to keep the expenditure within bounds.

"Of course there were friends of his own invited, and of course there were heavy drinking, and whilst father, Leah, Mrs. Matthews, and I sat together in the drawing-room, listening to the March winds blustering without, a noise of voices in loud contention came from the dining-room across the hall.

"'Liar!' 'Cheat!' 'Sharper!' 'Vagabond!' were among the epithets which smote our ears. Then there was a scuffle. We met the servants in the hall also hurrying to ascertain what was the matter, and as we opened the dining-room door we saw Captain Thornton with his hands on Oliver's throat. I shrieked. Sam, our man servant darted in, and helped to separate them—drawing his master towards the door.

"The faces of both men worked with passion; Oliver shook himself, snatched a decanter from the dining-table, and hurled it across at his antagonist with full force. Instinctively the captain put up his arm to guard his face. The decanter smashed upon his hand, gashing it frightfully.

"I believe there was a cry for a doctor, but not for me, though I had fainted and was carried back to the drawing-room sofa insensible.

"Captain Thornton's life was in peril from the hemorrh... age. His wrist was bound tightly before ... surgeon came to extract the glass and ... sew up the wound; but for all lock... was for a long time in danger of ... aw. When he did recover the muscles ... his right hand were so contracted that he could no longer shuffle cards, ride at hunt or steeple-chase, handle a billiard cue, or fire a gun; and he vowed vengeance against the man who had made life a burden to him.

"Oliver laughed, as was his wont; but evil seemed to haunt us from that hour—not as a consequence of that one act, but of much foregone, of which I know nothing.

"My father beckoned me into the library before he and Leah returned home, and he shut the door.

"'Mary,' said he gravely, 'had I known thy Oliver was such a wastrel I'd have chopped my hand off afore I'd ha' given thee to him. I'm afraid thou'lt rue afore long. Such riot and extravagance as I saw last night cannot last. And when his own brass is melted he'll want thy £1,000.'

"Never shall I forget his look of consternation as I told him I had given the money over to Oliver before we left home on our wedding day.

"'Then, ten to one, it's my money he's squandering!' he cried, in as much of a temper as I ever saw him; but he softened at my tears and added, 'It's my fault, Mary; I ought to have tied it down on thee. Never mind, lass, if th' worst comes to the worst, here's a home for thee and thy little Launcelot whilst I've a roof to cover me.'

"The end did not come quite as soon as father predicted, but it came quite soon enough. Bills came pouring in as soon as the rupture between Oliver and Captain Thornton got wind, and I had to soften to my husband's 'Hang it, let them wait,' as best I could, to importune duns—I who had never known what debtor and creditor meant beyond a 'bill of parcels' at school. Then credit was stopped, and Oliver swore over every sovereign he gave to me. Sometimes, after a brief absence, he came back with rolls of notes, but he would disappear too. And as his embarrassments increased he drank still more heavily and his temper grew so irritable no one knew how to deal with him.

"In our little Launcelot, whose winning ways beguiled many a dreary hour, and in the books in our cosy library, I tried to smother the sense of impending misfortune.

"One servant had already gone. The old housekeeper I myself dismissed, knowing my inability to pay her. And now I felt the value of Leah's sharp training, for I had to do the work of the house, cook, and nurse my baby into the bargain; and woe betide me if broil or roast or ragout were not to my husband's liking.

"He rode off one morning with a valise strapped before him, kissing Launcelot and me before he went, and I did not see him again for years. Before the day was out sheriff's officers were in the house, and but for kind Mrs. Matthews, who interceded for me, neither baby nor myself would have had so much as a change of raiment left.

"She took me home with her, a poor dazed stunned creature, who had not reached her twenty second birthday. Consoling Launcelot (who wept because his mother wept, as children will) with lump sugar and jam, she hushed him to rest, and then dispatched a hurried missive to my father.

"A couple of days elapsed, during which my heart sank to its lowest ebb. Then he came. He had been himself away at an auction and could not leave.

"He did not upbraid me. He said he had foreseen what was coming," and I know not whether he or I thanked Mrs. Matthews most heartily for her kindness.

"Back to my childhood's home I went with a heavy heart, and not all my dear father's heartiness could prevent me from feeling myself and child intruders.

"Soon after he sent me down to Mossford to my brother-in-law to learn confectionery, then stocked a shop and furnished a house for me in one of the old Rows of Chester, to the great indignation of the others.

"'It's best you try to get a living for Launce and yourself, my girl,' said my good father, 'and though I'd rather have you near me, it's wisest to remove you beyond the reach of envious eyes, and where that wastrel husband of yours will not think of looking for you.'

"At first I was very awkward in my new position. City and people were alike strange; but that perhaps helped to set me at ease behind my counter.

"Bright, hazel-eyed, five-year-old Launcelot was the star of my night. He was more like his grandfather Beech than his own father, of whom he had no remembrance; a black paper profile found at my father's being my only likeness of absent Oliver.

"Often and often I stood behind my counter and wondered if ever chance would bring him in there among the stream of customers; and yet I think I generally looked upon him as dead; no word or sign having reached me of his existence.

"It was May—sunny, scented May—and Chester race-week, Matty and I were as busy as bees from morning until night. Launce went to school. The second race day, a party of ladies and gentlemen came into the shop, talking and laughing as they came. One of them was Oliver Marbury!

I screamed and fainted. When I came to he was gone. After nightfall he came again and abused me for 'making a scene and compromising him with his friends.' But finding me in comfortable circumstances he took up his abode with me, professed to have exhausted his means in trying to discover us, and was lavish of caresses both to Launcelot and myself.

"I had never ceased to love him, and I hailed the prodigal's return. Yet, as of old, he came and went, and ere long began to drain my resources. He took from my pocket and from me till the money with which I should have preserved my credit, and gambled it away. The climax came when my little Mary was about four months old.

"My stock got low; I had no money to give him. Half drunk, he brought a broker on to the premises, sold to him stock, fixtures and furniture, regardless of my tears and entreaties; and, whilst the goods were being hurried away, put the proceeds in his pocket, and, carpet-bag in hand, turned on his heel, coarsely telling me old David Beech would make a home for me and the squallers. The children were both crying. At this Launcelot raised his little fist and struck at his unnatural father.

"Like a savage he turned upon the child to strike at him. On the impulse of the moment I interposed, and the blow meant for Launcelot came down upon myself and the baby in my arms. I dropped, and little Mary never cried again.

"They tell me I was frantic for months. At all events, I was spared the pain of giving evidence against my own husband. Matty and the broker's men sufficed.

"We had fallen against a piece of furniture in the way, and there was a suggestion that the babe had been killed in the fall. The charge of murder had been abandoned, but Oliver was found guilty of manslaughter, and condemned to seven years' transportation.

"Mrs. Matthews, good soul! took charge of Launce during my illness, and with Matty's help Leah nursed me at my father's, grumbling all the while at the trouble, the cost and the disgrace.

"I tried to shut my eyes on the future—to hope we might remain undisturbed, and to train my boy to better things. Meanwhile my father died. He had secured a shop for me, and left me a small annuity, to be paid quarterly.

"Eight years passed away. Launcelot, my pride and joy, was fifteen—a frank, good natured, and high spirited youth, whose mother was all in all to him.

"Suddenly the avalanche came down upon us. A fierce, dark, scowling reprobate came in at our door, and claimed as my husband a right to share my means. My heart sank. This was not the man I had sworn to love and obey.

"I was powerless to resist, and he stayed. Goaded by the thought that whilst he had been in captivity we had prospered, he tortured me in every way he could devise, and Launcelot became my champion. Then he made the boy his butt to wound me surest.

"At last Launcelot, seeing only shame and disgrace before him, conceiving that he was only a cause of outrage on me, as many a good son has done before, ran off to sea, and I was left to cope with Oliver Marbury alone.

"One night—shall I ever forget it?—a man clambered over the outhousing in at my chamber window. It was he, haggard, footsore, bloody. He had wounded a man and sought concealment. He threatened to kill me if I spoke a word. What money I had he took, ate greedily some bread and cheese, changed his clothes, and then fled as he came.

"Men were on the watch and he was taken. His blood-stained clothes were found in my room, where I sat white with terror.

"I was told that, in an affray with poachers on his preserves, Captain Thornton and a keeper had been killed, and I was questioned until my very brain began to reel.

"I thought I should be called upon to give evidence against him. I had loved him once. He was the father of my children. To avoid such a contingency I fled, whither I neither knew nor cared.

"I had no money—never thought of it. I went along lanes, through fields, avoiding the high roads, excitement keeping me up, though I had no food. The first night I took shelter in a barn, stealing off like a culprit at daybreak. I must have looked hungry, for a lad swinging on a gate, with a bunch of bread in his hand, broke it in two and offered half to me.

"That night I dropped on a stone by the wayside and fell asleep. I was aroused by some one calling to me. A gentleman in a gig offered me a seat if I was going his way. The moon shone full on his face and in my surprise I ejaculated.

"Mr. Smithson!

"I know not whose surprise was the greatest. My father had dealt with him for years and he had called on Amos Bradley only the day before. My troubles were not unknown to him. I told him all. He took me home to Redditch, to his wife, and there I remained.

"My husband's sentence now was for life. There was no fear of his breaking in upon me, they said; but, ah! thought and memory did that.

"Mr Smithson would have had me change my name, but I dared not destroy the only clue by which Launce might seek his mother. From time to time I heard of him through Mrs. Matthews. Once I went to meet him in Liverpool—only once. I expected him home from California last Christmas.

"When I went home from this shop, Mrs. Chappell in November, I bought a newspaper to read over my tea. I read that the Rosicrucian had foundered off Cape Verde, and all hands gone down with her. It was my son's ship!

"Mrs. Chappell, my last hope went down in the Rosicrucian. It matters nothing now who knows my story, or who does not. It is all as one to "MARY MARBURY."

THE NEW

REMINGTON

Sewing Machine

STILL STANDS

UNRIVALLED.

All competent judges acknowledge it to be the simplest, the easiest, the quietest and the most easily handled of any shuttle machine now in market. It will sew with perfect stitch, from the finest muslin to the heaviest and firmest beaver cloth, or leather, without change of stitch, needle, thread or tension. Its percentage of increase of sales in 1874 was 50% per cent and 87½ per cent. more than any other machine. In 1875 its ratio of increase was still greater, being 100 per cent. More than fifteen thousand other machines of first-class make have already been exchanged for it.

No person wishing a sewing machine can do themselves justice, whatever their prejudice, if they fail to examine the New Remington before purchasing. Five dollars a month will buy you a Remington at 35 BROADWAY.
